My engineering training at BRE paved a career path on which I have become a professional building engineer. The BEM programme not only help me to establish a solid foundation of building construction knowledge, but also developed my personal skills so I could become a competent leader. With comprehensive training, I was the Best Graduate Candidate in the 2009-2010 Membership Examination of the Hong Kong Institution of Engineers (Building Division).

Building Engineering is a great profession that contributes enormously to human development. I hope my story will inspire young people to study in the BEM programme and join the construction industry as well.

Chen Fai Wing, Phyllis

Given that the construction industry is expected to generate huge demand for fresh engineers in the near future, I graduated at just the right time. Throughout my three years of study, BRE gave me a glimpse of the building profession, not only academically but also practically. The courses featured up-to-date industry knowledge to ensure that students are well equipped before entering the business world. Meanwhile, extracurricular activities such as the Asian Coalition for Building Science and Construction Engineering and a study tour provided me with exposure to foreign technologies and cultures. Working as a member of the organizing committee of our study tour also helped me to developed my leadership and planning skills. All these gave me an advantage over graduates from other universities.

My current role as a management trainee at Hip Hing Construction is very challenging. Without the guidance and support I received from BRE I would not have had a clear picture of my career development, and neither would I have earned a place at the company in today's competitive environment.

Lam Ho Yip, Percy
